MEMORANDUM FOR: Director, National Photographic Interpretation Center

SUBJECT : History of Agency Components

1. In view of the interest and effort concentrated on recording the history of various components of the Agency one very intriguing question arises. What steps have been taken toward developing a collection of equipment, papers, models, briefing boards, et al for the establishment of an Intelligence Museum or at least a Photo Interpretation Museum?

2. The interest occasioned by the newspaper articles on and his historical collection of books on intelligence housed at the Watergate Apartments is a case in point.

- 3. It is another matter to accumulate a worthwhile collection of PI paraphernalia and products. The fascinating and challenging museum that could be assembled to tell the story of PI makes one drool at the thought. And, where else could a better museum collection be made than at NPIC -- the cross-roads of equipment, personnel, techniques, reporting procedures, etc.
- 4. The small British displays through WW II at the Imperial War Museum in London are well done and are real crowd drawers. Of course, the full U.S. story could not be told for public consumption but perhaps someday it could be. Will it be too late then to pull together a story that only the U.S. can tell with NPIC as the best of curators?
- 5. When I wander through museums here and abroad I constantly visualize the tremendous story that could be told about PI. The opportunity that is being missed is a real once in a lifetime chance. To miss such an opportunity for lack of a little space or a relatively paltry sum of money seems like a real catastrophe. Every time equipment and files are jettisoned I shudder. We are the epitome of a "picture is worth 10,000 words" yet we are creating mainly a word history of NPIC.

coward the establishment of a Muse	et approval to start assembling a collection um of Photo Interpretation? I would work to such a task and scramble around in and cataloging the items.	25X1
